Chapter 1

1. The principles of management: are the means by which you actually manage, that is, get things done through others—individually, in groups, or in organizations.
2. The fundamental notion of principles of management was developed by French management theorist Henri Fayol (1841–1925).
3. Managers are required in all the activities of organizations: budgeting, designing, selling, creating, financing, accounting, and artistic presentation; the larger the organization, the more managers are needed. Everyone employed in an organization is affected by management principles, processes, policies, and practices as they are either a manager or a subordinate to a manager, and usually they are both.
4. Monitor, disseminator, and spokesperson are the three decisional managerial roles in an organization.
5. Planning is the function of management that involves setting objectives and determining a course of action for achieving these objectives.
6. Leadership: the social and informal sources of influence that you use to inspire action taken by others.
7. P&G recruits and promotes those individuals who demonstrate success through influence rather than direct or coercive authority.
8. Decisions made about the structure of an organization are generally referred to as operational planning decisions.
9. All organizations need strategies to survive and thrive. Effective controlling requires the existence of plans, since planning provides the necessary performance standards or objectives.
10. Strategic management - is the body of knowledge that answers questions about the development and implementation of good strategies. A manager must understand the compatibility of individual and group performance with respect to goals and objectives.
11. Leading involves the social and informal sources of influence that you use to inspire action taken by others. to become effective at leading, managers must first understand their subordinates' personalities, values, attitudes, and emotions.
12. Organizing also involves the design of individual jobs within the organization. Decisions must be made about the duties and responsibilities of individual jobs, as well as the manner in which the duties should be carried out.
13. Organizing at the level of the organization involves deciding how best to departmentalize, or cluster, jobs into departments to coordinate effort effectively. There are many different ways to departmentalize, including organizing by function, product, geography, or customer. Many larger organizations use multiple methods of departmentalization.

Principles of Business Management (University of the People)

Chapter 1

1. The principles of management: are the means by which you actually manage, that is, get things done through others—individually, in groups, or in organizations.
2. The fundamental notion of principles of management was developed by French management theorist Henri Fayol (1841–1925).
3. Managers are required in all the activities of organizations: budgeting, designing, selling, creating, financing, accounting, and artistic presentation; the larger the organization, the more managers are needed. Everyone employed in an organization is affected by management principles, processes, policies, and practices as they are either a manager or a subordinate to a manager, and usually they are both.
4. Monitor, disseminator, and spokesperson are the three decisional managerial roles in an organization.
5. Planning is the function of management that involves setting objectives and determining a course of action for achieving these objectives.
6. Leadership: the social and informal sources of influence that you use to inspire action taken by others.
7. P&G recruits and promotes those individuals who demonstrate success through influence rather than direct or coercive authority.
8. Decisions made about the structure of an organization are generally referred to as operational planning decisions.
9. All organizations need strategies to survive and thrive. Effective controlling requires the existence of plans, since planning provides the necessary performance standards or objectives.
10. Strategic management - is the body of knowledge that answers questions about the development and implementation of good strategies. A manager must understand the compatibility of individual and group performance with respect to goals and objectives.
11. Leading involves the social and informal sources of influence that you use to inspire action taken by others. to become effective at leading, managers must first understand their subordinates' personalities, values, attitudes, and emotions.
12. Organizing also involves the design of individual jobs within the organization. Decisions must be made about the duties and responsibilities of individual jobs, as well as the manner in which the duties should be carried out.
13. Organizing at the level of the organization involves deciding how best to departmentalize, or cluster, jobs into departments to coordinate effort effectively. There are many different ways to departmentalize, including organizing by function, product, geography, or customer. Many larger organizations use multiple methods of departmentalization.
